Reverence

by Nightcrawler247

Summary

Will is a psychic witch healer sear in a tribe that, while keeps him around out of necessity, fears hates and alienates him.

Hannibal is a chief of a tribe that greatly honors and respects the supernatural. When his people conquer Will's tiny village Will trades himself for the freedom of his people.

He will find his life getting exponentially better in the palace of this conquering mad man, but still... he wishes for nothing more then to go back to his familiar home and people he cares for greatly. No matter how kind this Hannibal is to him.

Witches are considered a necessary evil.

They provide medicine, protection, and guidance on things of the spiritual. They work for the better meant of their village though often through dark means. Witches are known from birth, their strength is later determined as they age. Most are not that powerful and only really grow to be a modicum of use to their village. Enough to sustain.

Will was a known witch from birth. Marked by a small crescent shape on his ankle. The mark of a witch. While the village had long been in dire need for a witch they were not happy for the one they got. While it was clear that he would be strong and powerful from the signs he showed as a child many though them to grow into a dark and fiendish untrustworthy person. Having killed his mother in birth what else could they assume?

While his dad did his best to care for him and the younger generation seemed less inclined to fear him, Will still grew up isolated and feared by his own people. A pained thing to have to endure given his love for them. how much he cared for his village and wanted to provide and contribute like any other member. Like any other witch would. He would give anything to help keep safe those people who feared and hated him so.

Even sell himself for their safety to invaders.
